Undecided?

Don’t be surprised if you’re not sure which major you to declare. Almost 24 percent of our freshmen are undecided, and later choose a program. You probably have dozens of interests and want to see which one offers the most for your future. Or you want to see which program points you in the direction of your ideal career. Either way, we have several resources available to you.

At CSU Stanislaus, we offer more than 100 majors, minors and areas of concentration, 24 master’s degree programs, seven postbaccalaureate credentials, and a Doctor of Education program. It’s our belief that we have the programs to satisfy every student — including you!

Your future is our future

The experts at the Advising Resource Center care about helping you find a major program that fits your needs. And how about a one-on-one with a college dean to gain some insight and advising? It’s an option. Everyone on our campus is vested in your success. Explore your options at www.csustan.edu/ARC
Strongly motivated students may design a special B.A./B.S. interdisciplinary academic program leading to a degree not offered through existing programs. Students interested in a Special Major should seek a volunteer faculty advisory committee consisting of three professors from at least two disciplines. A program designed jointly with this faculty committee is then submitted for approval.

It’s not a school year, it’s an ‘Experience’

Want to make new friends, get to know faculty, be mentored by a peer leader, and get acquainted with campus resources? Our First-Year Experience Program lets freshmen join a learning community of 25 students who take classes together. For more information, visit www.csustan.edu and search “First Year Programs.”

Benefits of attending a four-year university as a freshman

- There's no need to worry about which credits are transferable.
- Our expert advisors take great pride in helping students choose from many diverse majors.
- It is much easier to get desired classes that fit into your schedule because we are able to offer more courses.
- We have a multitude of professional faculty members, keeping our student-to-faculty ratio extremely low.

O.K. You’re not sure about a major. That’s not a problem, though. It’s actually an advantage for you because you can explore your options by taking a variety of lower- and upper-division General Education courses.

Once you’re exposed to a few classes in the General Education curriculum, you might learn that you want to study English or Business Administration, or you have developed a passion for one of the sciences.

Currently, the General Education program requires students to complete 51 semester units — including nine upper-division units of selected courses within seven broad categories. Sounds like a perfect way to broaden your options, right?
