

The research in my poster came from learning about human rights in Professor Conteh class and as a criminal justice major it should be important to know what are human rights before entering a profession that enforces law to protect people. Many people that are detained are denied their freedom and as a result there has been a cascade of people that have overcrowded jails. Even after there was bail reform the backlash that followed continued to discriminate against people not able to either, buy their freedom, or be labeled as a threat to society. The impunity of many who felt that public opinion demanded for a change in the criminal justice system is a clear violation of human rights as stated in documents that outline treatment of detainees. The reports from states fail to fulfill obligations that have been neglected by the United States when it comes to rights of people that are incarcerated.
